The Times Herald-Record's analysis is based on a database of 39,400 public employee salaries from 2007 compiled with information obtained through the state's Freedom of Information Law. Included in the recordonline.com's database are the names of public employees, their titles or positions, their salary or hourly wage and the name of the agency they work for. These figures reflect an employee's base salary provided to us by their public employer at the time of our requests in April 2007, but not overtime nor benefits. Not included are details that would be invasive, like Social Security numbers, home addresses, race, ethnicity and whether an employee is having their wages garnished to pay child support, etc. Such information, by law, is exempt from public disclosure.
